UWE Harvard referencing

A quick guide to the most commonly cited media formats

Each time you use someone else's words or ideas in your work, it is essential that you acknowledge them. This is done by briefly referring to (citing) the sources of information in the text of your work, with the corresponding references at the end. This guide will help you reference the most commonly used media formats, using the UWE Harvard referencing style. For guidance on in-text citations, together with further information on Harvard referencing and a range of tools to help you get it right go to www.uwe.ac.uk/referencing.

You should check your module handbooks for guidance on which referencing style is required for your course.
